Agricultural. |Clippings from the Reports of the New York Farmers' Club, and from the New York Tribune.

An English farmer cured a dog of the sheepkilling propensity by tying him securely between two stout rams and letting them drag him about till he was "dead tired."

Gas-lime acts as a fertilizer by supplying lime to the soil. This is its only beneficial effect, and this is obtained only by exposing it to the air that its deleterious properties when fresh may pass off, and the lime be thus rendered comparatively pure. The impurities which render fresh gas-lime deleterious to vegetation are chlorine and sulphuretted hydrogen, both of which are deadly poisons to vegetable

Joshua Fiero, Ulster county, N. Y., speaks against bonfires, and says it is better to bury filth than to burn it, for the reason that smoke spreads disease. He adds: Let all who have a spot of ground large enough dig a hole from two to four feet deep, according to the amount of dirt and filth that may be collected, and fill up the hole with old boots and shoes, bones, old bottles, and filthy rags, dead cats (and live cats if you have more of them than you need, plant them in the hole, place a sharp spade upon their necks and see how far you can settle them); then fill up the hole with earth, and set a tree or vine. Do this each and every year, and you will soon have better health and more fruit or shade trees.

The chief dependence in fattening Pork, says the Rural World, should be on good pasturage. Clover pasturage is considered the best, but all kinds of pasturage are relished by swine, and they thrive on it as readily as other stock. It is not economical to keep hogs up in pens and yards and feed them by hand every mouthful they eat; they should have pastures just as much as cattle or sheep or horses. They must be taught to take care of themselves, and they will gladly do it if the pasture is good and supplied with water. An ear or two of corn to each head is, however, highly advisable. In fattening hogs a great deal of of unnecessary labor is given.

In some comments on crop statistics furnished by the Department of Agriculture, The Maryland Farmer says: It uniformly appears from this fund of correspondence that wheat put in with the drill suffered much less from frost and Winter-killing and from drouth than that sewed broadcast; this is the testimony from south, west, and north, and worth heeding. The general testimony proves also, that the wheat on deep plowed, well-drained lands was injured less by frost and drouth than on the contrary. The experience of careful operators shows that Winter grains and meadows, when well mulched or top dressed with fine manure, forest leaves, saw-dust, or litter, suffer less from Winter frost and Summer drouth than when not so treated. These things are worth noticing and practicing. Deep plowing, drill-sowing, under-draining, and top dressing for wheat and for meadows. WHEN TO TRANSPLANT TREES. -If we may judge by the number of inquires received at this office, the interest in fruit-culture has never been more active than at the present time. Many person are asking whether it is better to transplant in Fall or wait till Spring. This question has always been and seems likely to continue an unsettled one, even among the most invites attention. fruits, including pears, apples and peaches, much more depends upon the condition and preparation of the ground than upon the season at which the transplanting takes place At different times, and under different treatment, we have instituted experiments, the results of which we hoped might serve as a guide, but as yet nothing definite on this point has been determined. On four or five occasions, in putting out lots of 200 to 500 pear trees, half would be planted in the Fall and the other half in the Spring. Twice there was a very noticeable difference in the growth of the trees for a year or two, but invariably this difference would disappear, so that at the end of five years one could not positively distinguish between them. With tall and weak trees there is serious objection to Fall planting. The Winter and early Spring winds will, unless the tress are staked, sway them backward and forward to such an extent as to seriously disturb and displace the roots. This is especially true of cherry and spindling apple trees. When this evil is guarded against, then Fall has some decided advantages over Spring planting. For instance, in the Fall there is less pressing work to be done, and therefore more time can be given in the transplanting to details that are important to the welfare of the trees .-Again, the ground is usually during Autumn in better order for a longer period, so that there is no necessity of hurrying forward the work, as is frequently the case in the Spring. For these reasons we have on different occasions recommended Fall planting of apples, pears, peaches, and grapes, nor do we see any good reason to change opinion in this respect. There is no doubt, however, that, all things being equal the Spring is decidedly the best season in which to do the work. But the frost may remain in the ground till the middle of April. Following this may be a spell of wet weather, keeping the soil heavy and cold, and unfit to plant trees in, and thus the time be so shortened that the job if done at all has to be done in a hurry, in which event many important minor matters are likely to be neglected. Better wait a whole year than run the risk of planting the trees in wet ground, under any

Before planting see to it that the ground is in good order, thoroughly pulverized by plowing, cross plowing, and subsoiling, until every part of it, to a depth of 18 inches, is well dis-turbed. For fruit trees, ground should be in good heart, but it is a great mistake to suppose that they need to be planted in rich garden soil. Ground that will give 150 to 200 bushels of potatoes to the acre is strong enough for them or for grapevines. Well-rotted yard manure applied a year or two in advance will best bring the soil up to the standard of quality. At the time of setting, some finely-ground JANNEY & CO'S. As to the season, however, we repeat that with a good scason, nowever, we repeat that with a good sold in good order, properly mellowed, it will be safe to transplant apples, pears, peaches, or grapes, either in Spring or Fall.—New York

These are some of the sad and metancholy effects produced by the early habits of youth, viz: Weakness of the Back and Limbs, Pains in the Head, Dimness of Sight, Loss of muscular Power, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Nervous Irritability, Derangement of the Digestive Functions, General Debility, Symtoms of Consumption, &c.

MENTALLY.—The fearful effects on the mind are much to be dreaded. Loss of Memory, Confusion of Ideas, Depression of Spirits, Evil Forebodings, Aversion to Society, Self Distrust, Love of Solitude, Timidity, &c., are some of the evils produced. Thousands of persons of all ages can now judge what is the cause of their declining health, losing their vigor, becoming weak, pale, nervous and emaciated, having a singular appearance about the eyes, cough and symptoms of Consumption. YOUNG MEN Who have injured themselves by a certain pracwho have indicate the many tice, already described, a habit frequently learned from evil companions or at school, the effects of which are nightly felt, even when asleep, and life by the consequence of deviating from the path of nature, and indulging in pernicious habits. Such persons must, before comtemplat-

Indeed, without these the journey through life becomes a weary pilgrimage, the prospect hourly darkens to the view, the mlnd becomes shadowed with despair, and filled with the melancholy reflection that the happiness of another is blighted with our own.

DISEASES OF IMPRUDENCE. When the misguided and imprudent votary of pleasure finds that he has imbibed the seeds of this painful disease, it too often happens that an ill-timed sense of shame or dread of discovery deters him from applying to those who, from education and respectability, can alone befriend him, delaying till the constitutional symptoms of this horrid disease makes their appearance, such as horrid disease makes their appearance, such as ulcerated sore throat, diseased nose, nocturnal pains in the head and limbs, dimness of sight, deafness, nodes on the shin bones and arms, blotches on the head, face and extremities, progressing with frightful rapidity, till at last the palate of the mouth or the bones of the nose fall in, and the victim of this awful disease be-iall in, and the victim of this awful disease becomes a horrid object of commisseration till death puts a period to his dreadful suffering, by sending him to that undiscovered country "from whence no traveller returns."

It is a melancholy fact that thousands DIE victims to this terrible disease, through falling into the hands of ignorant or unskilful PRETENDERS, who, by the use of that deadly Poison, Mercury, &c., destroy the constitution, and incapable of curing, keep the unhappy sufferer month after month taking their noxious or injurious compounds, and instead of being restored to a renewal of Life, Vigor and Happiness in despair leaves him with ruined Health to sigh in despair leaves him with ruined Health to sigh
